

ABSTRACT

This invention relates to a current source adapted to generate a current proportional to absolute temperature which has a greatly reduced supply voltage dependence and is still able to operate at low operating voltages. This is achieved by the 5 incorporation of a compensation resistor through which the start-up current is passed.